Working life

Children diagnosed with a learning disability are living longer and more fulfilling lives as they transition into adolescence, adulthood, and older age. Learning disability nurses play a crucial role in supporting these individuals throughout their lives in various health and care settings.

You'll care for individuals with learning disabilities with the person you're working with being at the centre of all decisions. Your goal is making sure they receive an equitable level of care for their individual needs. You'll work collaboratively with them, their families, and various teams across multiple settings. You'll be an educator, advocate, and leader, empowering people with learning disabilities to reach their full potential and lead healthy, independent lives.

The main areas of your role as a learning disability nurse involve:

- improving or maintaining a person's physical and mental health
- reducing barriers to them living an independent life
- supporting the person in living a fulfilling life

You may work in a variety of settings, including people's homes, residential or nursing facilities, educational institutions, specialist units such as prisons, GP practices, or hospital settings. You will collaborate as part of a broader team that may include GPs, psychologists, psychiatrists, social workers, teachers, occupational therapists, speech and language therapists, and physiotherapists.
