Dental support workers are part of the dental health team. See how they help to treat patients and give advice on looking after teeth. Find out how you could become a dental support worker.

This page has information on the role of dental support workers, including entry requirements and skills needed.

Working life

Dental support workers are clinical support workers who work as part of the dental team. In this role, you'll work under the supervision of a dentist <sup>[1]</sup> or a dental nurse <sup>[2]</sup> to treat patients and give advice.

Working as a dental support worker, you'll:

- greet patients and reassures people who are nervous make appointments
- give basic advice about dental care
- keep records
- mix the materials for filling teeth
- help with x-rays
- sterilise instruments and equipment
- pass instruments to the dentist
- help patients with mouth rinsing

Where will I work?

You'll work in clinics which could be based in the community or in a hospital. You may also visit patients in their homes or in residential or care homes if patients cannot travel.

Some dental support workers may also be known as dental health support workers. They give advice on looking after teeth including

- preventing tooth decay
- showing adults and children how to brush teeth effectively
- fluoride treatment

You may visit schools, nurseries and other community settings to show people how to look after their teeth. You may also visit families at home.

Who will I work with?

As well as working with dentists <sup>[3]</sup> and dental nurses <sup>[2]</sup>, you may also work with dental hygienists <sup>[4]</sup> and dental therapists <sup>[5]</sup>. You will have a lot of contact with patients.

Entry requirements

There are no set entry requirements for dental support workers. Employers usually expect good literacy, numeracy and IT skills. They may ask for GCSEs or equivalent qualifications.

Employers often ask for relevant work experience. Even where this is not specified, it would be an advantage if you have worked in health or social care, either in paid employment or voluntary work. There are sometimes apprenticeships <sup>[6]</sup> in dental support roles.

Some dental support workers may also be known as dental health support workers.

Dental support staff working in the NHS are paid on the Agenda for Change (AfC) <sup>[7]</sup> pay system. You would typically start on AfC <sup>[8]</sup> band 2. With further training, experience and provided you had the appropriate qualifications necessary, you could apply for training in the other dental care professionals roles such as dental nurse, dental hygienist or dental therapist.

Most dental support workers in the NHS work standard hours, which are likely to be around 37.5 a week. They may work some evenings or weekends.

Terms and conditions will usually be different for dental support staff working outside of the NHS.
