• Public health manager <sup>[1]</sup>

Public health managers make a vital contribution to supporting the health of the public.

Training and qualifications required

There are a variety of training and qualifications requirements that may be required to work as a public health manager. It's important therefore to check the person specification of the individual employer for detailed requirements. Common qualifications include a degree in a relevant subject and project management skills or qualifications. It's also usual that applicants will bring significant experience from previous roles.

Expected working hours and salary range

Your working hours are likely to vary depending on the employer and the nature of the work. For example, working hours may generally be from 9am to 5pm Monday to Friday but there may be variations to this which are determined by the individual employer (such as for evening meetings, events or particular projects).

Desirable skills and values

You'll be a competent and capable manager bringing a range of well developed managerial skills to your work such as organisation, planning, financial and people management. It's likely you'll need to make challenging decisions and to ensure best use of available resources.

Prospects

Public health managers may progress to more senior management roles depending on their experience and interests. They may also wish to apply for public health specialist roles and undertake specialty training in public health.

• Practice manager <sup>[5]</sup>

Practice managers are vital to the successful running of GP surgeries. You'll manage the business and operational aspects of the surgery, making sure that patients are at the centre.

Training and qualifications required

You could enter a career in practice management from a range of different backgrounds. You don't necessarily need to be a qualified healthcare professional. Qualifications and experience required will vary, but you'll usually need a management qualification, and a proven experience of motivating people. Experience of working in the NHS/general practice experience can be an advantage.

Expected working hours and salary range

Terms and conditions vary for practice managers. Most are employed directly by the partners of the practice but some practices run on Agenda for Change (AfC) terms and conditions. Your pay and conditions of employment are determined by a number of different factors including the number of patients registered with the practice, the number of sites it operates from, and your level of responsibility within the management structure.

Desirable skills and values

To work in practice management, you'll typically need excellent financial skills, the ability to manage a changing environment, good communication skills, leadership and motivational skills, organisational skills, a willingness to work with others and respect their views, confidence with information technology, negotiating skills, the ability to challenge the way things are and find better alternatives, honesty and fairness in dealing with other people and a commitment to the ideals of quality and fairness in delivering healthcare.

Prospects

With further training and experience, you will be able to develop your career in a number of directions, depending on how your practice is set up. You could work in a management role within your Primary Care Network (PCN), or get involved in the work of your local integrated care board (ICB), looking at the care needs of a bigger population. Your employer may also offer you the opportunity to become a managing partner.
